Monroe “Pops” McTaw

- The 1960s, '70s and '80s were a gilded age for basketball in Rochester, and Monroe “Pops” McTaw played it, lived it, defined it.
- A wiry 6-foot-7 center/forward, Mr. McTaw grew to love the game the more his skills — and his body grew — on a playground off Hudson Avenue.
- A Section V championship in 1970 at Ben Franklin High School, where McTaw led coach Jack Christensen’s Quakers to a 21-1 record.
- An NCAA Division III Final Four appearance in 1975 at SUNY Brockport, playing for legendary coach Mauro Panaggio.
- Two Continental Basketball Association championships in 1979 and '81 for the Rochester Zeniths, the city’s beloved pro team.
- A tryout with the old Buffalo Braves of the NBA.
- There were barnstorming years for a local semi-pro team that matched up with clubs in Niagara Falls, Syracuse, Schenectady, Binghamton — any place with a hoop and players with hope.
- “Generationally, Pops is one of the Top 20 players that came out of Rochester in my lifetime,” Franklin teammate Mike “Tree” Swinton said. “I watched him play the game way up to an age when he shouldn’t have been playing but he had such passion. He was an incredible athlete. There were very few things on the court he couldn’t do and he was one of the most intelligent players who played. He had that sense of where you were going to be, how to get you the ball, timing to block shots, all of it.”
